

Duquesne Law Review

Call for Articles

About The Duquesne Law Review

The Duquesne Law Review is the flagship journal of the Duquesne University School of Law. The journal is entirely student-run and publishes scholarly works by legal professionals and academics biannually. Duquesne Law Review serves the legal community as a forum for the examination, analysis, and criticism of various facets of the law through a commitment to not only inform and influence courts, the bar, and legal scholars, but also to afford law students an opportunity for an integral role in that process, and to do so with the highest professional and ethical standards befitting of a Duquesne law student.

Submissions

The Duquesne Law Review is accepting submissions of articles regarding novel and relevant legal issues relating to privacy or data security for its 59th Volume. Relevant articles should resolve important issues in the realm of privacy law. Successful submissions can expect to be published in the Spring Issue of the Duquesne Law Review between May and June of 2021.

Submission Guidelines

- The Duquesne Law Review requests that all articles submitted have a minimum word count of 7,500 words.
- Co-authorship is permissible; All authors please submit an updated curriculum vitae and/or resume.
- Submissions should be emailed to the Duquesne Law Review Executive Board at: duquesnelr@gmail.com by November 22, 2020.

Contact Information

Please email duquesnelr@gmail.com for further inquiries.